

GGNB Commitment to Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion

The Graduate Group in Nutritional Biology (GGNB) at the University of California, Davis is committed to ensuring a welcoming space for all. Our graduate group celebrates the diversity of our members, fosters an equitable educational and scientific environment, and welcomes all inclusively. The GGNB acknowledges and respects the diverse heritages, traditions, and experiences of all members of our community. These differences include race, religion, national origin, ethnicity, color, age, gender, gender identity, marital status, citizenship, sexual orientation, first-generation status, or ability/disability, and more. We affirm that inherent individual commonalities and differences strengthen our graduate group and the work it produces. From mechanisms linking diet to health and disease to intervention studies, research conducted by the GGNB investigators has important implications for health equity and evaluating and informing nutrition policy.
